

Associate Professor: International Relations

- School of International Studies
- Magill campus, South Australia
- Total remuneration package: $113K – $124K (effective 30 June 2007)
- Continuing position

The School conducts a range of innovative teaching programs around international studies and interculturality, and supports an active research culture. Specific international studies are offered in international relations, world politics, Asian studies, and languages, with a focus on questions of human security, rights, identities and development.

The Associate Professor will provide academic and research leadership in International Relations and International Studies. Specific responsibilities will include teaching and managing the academic program of the BA (International Studies) and its double degrees. Additionally, the position will provide research leadership in growing the research output of the School.

The successful candidate will have wide International Relations teaching experience, proven academic leadership credentials and an outstanding active research publications record.

With access to award winning flexible family friendly working conditions, this position is based in stunning natural environs 7 km from the Adelaide CBD.

Job applications close: 9.00am Monday 4 June 2007

Further details available at: www.unisa.edu.au/hrm/careers

The University is an Equal Opportunity Employer • Employer of Choice for Women • People of Aboriginal Australian and Torres Strait Islander cultural and linguistic background are encouraged to apply

Gold Award Winner – 2005 ACCI/BCA National Work & Family Awards